

Margaret Murray serves as the Programming Coordinator in the University of Dayton Women's Center. Her role in the Women's Center focuses on developing programs and events for the UD community that have a social and gender justice foundation, as well as advocate for a more equitable campus climate for all students, faculty and staff.

Before working at the University of Dayton Margaret served as the graduate assistant in the Wright State University Women's Center, working with students on leadership development and coordinating outreach and educational initiatives related to the mission and vision of the Women's Center. She also taught a first-year seminar course related to diversity and inclusion during her tenure at Wright State.

Margaret earned her Master's degree in Student Affairs in Higher Education and Women's Studies from Wright State University, and her Bachelor's degree in Sociology and Political Science from Otterbein University.
