April is National Financial Literacy Month

Did you know? In the 2014 Consumer Financial Literacy Survey* of adults in the U.S., about three in five (59%) gave themselves an A or B on their knowledge of personal finance.

Despite respondents' high marks, the survey also revealed that:

- Only two in five (39%) say they have a budget and keep close track of their spending.
- One in three (32%) still does not save any portion of their household annual income for retirement.
- More than 35 million roll over $2,500 or more in credit card debt each month.

How do you compare? And now how would you grade yourself?

April is National Financial Literacy Month. It's an opportunity for you to take a closer look at your personal finances – and more importantly, to make sure they're on the right track in relation to your long-term goals.

We're proud to join with TIAA-CREF to support National Financial Literacy Month. Take advantage of the information, tools and resources. It's easier than you think to build your financial knowledge and work toward financial security. To learn more:
